

FREE RESOURCES

5 Ways to Become a Christian Thinker in Ghana

A Practical Guide to Growing in Wisdom, Faith, and Influence

Introduction

In a culture where faith is often expressed through passion and emotion, it's easy to forget that God also calls us to love Him with our minds. Becoming a Christian thinker doesn't mean you abandon faith for reason; it means you develop both together. Ghana needs believers who understand Scripture deeply, engage culture thoughtfully, and live wisely in every sphere of life.

Whether you're a student, professional, pastor, or young adult, this tool will guide you through 5 simple but powerful ways to become a Christian thinker in Ghana today.

1. Read the Bible with Your Brain, Not Just Your Heart

It's easy to approach the Bible only for comfort, motivation, or quick inspiration. But if you want to grow as a Christian thinker, you need to study the Bible in context dig deep.

How to do this:

- Use a good study Bible with footnotes and maps.
- Ask key questions: Who wrote this? Why? What's the cultural background?
- Try inductive Bible study (Observation → Interpretation → Application).
- Memorize Scripture and understand it.

Recommended Tools:

- ESV Study Bible, Logos Bible App, BibleProject videos

2. Build a Reading Habit Beyond Devotionals

Many Christians in Ghana don't read outside the Bible or devotionals. But Christian thinkers read broadly: theology, history, philosophy, current affairs, economics, ethics, and more all through a gospel lens.

How to do this:

- Set a small reading goal (e.g., 1 book per month).
- Join a faith-based book club or create one at your church.

- Follow Christian blogs, newsletters, and podcasts that challenge your thinking.
- Read authors who are different from you but grounded in truth.

Suggested Reading:

- “Knowing God” by J.I. Packer
- “The Call” by Os Guinness
- “Every Good Endeavor” by Tim Keller
- Ghanaian Christian authors like Mensa Otabil, Theophilus Okoh, or Emmanuel Asante

3. Engage Culture with a Biblical Mindset

Christian thinking isn’t just about theology it’s about how we interpret and respond to life. Politics, economics, art, media, and technology all need voices that are rooted in truth. Don’t retreat from culture; engage it.

How to do this:

- Follow national conversations on education, policy, and ethics.
- Ask: What would Jesus say about this issue?
- Speak up on social media, at work, in school, or church.
- Create, critique, and contribute from a place of conviction.

Examples of Engagement:

- A teacher shaping school culture with grace and discipline
- A journalist reporting with truth and justice
- A youth leader addressing social media influence with biblical wisdom

4. Ask Questions and Don’t Be Afraid of Doubt

Christian thinkers are curious. They ask questions not to destroy faith, but to deepen it. God isn’t afraid of your doubts. The Psalms, Ecclesiastes, and Job are full of deep wrestling with life, injustice, and even God Himself.

How to do this:

- Journal your faith questions and look for biblical answers.

- Attend discussions or debates with humility and courage.
- Be honest with your doubts but don't let them become excuses.
- Talk to mentors who encourage both faith and thought.

Faithful Questions to Start With:

- Why does God allow suffering?
- What does justice mean in today's Ghana?
- How can faith influence business ethics?

5. Connect Faith to Your Work or Calling

Christian thinking isn't limited to theology it affects how you lead, work, vote, teach, serve, or run a business. God doesn't just want you in church; He wants you to reflect His wisdom wherever He's placed you.

How to do this:

- Ask: How does my faith shape how I treat clients, co-workers, or students?
- Dedicate your field of work to God's kingdom study it with purpose.
- Learn from Christian professionals in your industry.
- Make excellence a form of worship.

Fields Where Ghana Needs Christian Thinkers:

- Education
- Politics
- Journalism
- Business & Entrepreneurship
- Medicine
- Arts & Media
- Technology

Final Encouragement

You don't have to be a scholar or a pastor to become a Christian thinker. You just need a hungry mind, an open heart, and a desire to grow. In a country where believers are many but thought leaders are few, you can make a real difference by becoming a voice of wisdom, truth, and grace.

The church in Ghana is ready for a new generation not just of believers, but of thinkers.

Want to go deeper

Visit www.annetteyeboah.com for more tools, guides, and faith-centered content.